

Hannah Grandits is a lecturer and researcher (prae doc) at the Department for International Law at the University of Vienna. She has studied law at the University of Vienna and spent an Erasmus-semester in Lund.

She gained experience through her internships in law firms (in arbitration and real estate law) and through her work as a student research assistant at the Institute for Roman Law and at the Department for International Law. Before joining the Department for International law, she also worked on a project on “Artificial Intelligence and Fundamental Rights”.