

Nektarios Papadimos, LL.M. mult., Attorney-at-Law, is a doctoral candidate in international law and dispute settlement at the University of Vienna where he also serves as University Assistant (prae doc) at the Department of European, International and Comparative Law, Section of International Law and International Relations.

Nektarios studied law at the universities of Athens and Cambridge, and he has previously worked for the Greek Ministry of Foreign Affairs, the UN Office of Legal Affairs, the SIAC Secretariat, and for a boutique law firm in Athens.

His interests include private and public international law, international organizations, international arbitration and dispute settlement, international economic law, law of treaties, and law of international responsibility.